About Water Sector

World population growth, socio-economic development and changing consumption patterns are the three major grouped driven forces which have accelerated the rate of water usage worldwide by about 1 percent per year since the 1980s (UN reports, 2019). Today the rising demands in the industrial and domestic sectors have hastened the water usage in geometric rate. Millions of people are compelled to live their life under severe scarcity of water supply. Increasing demand for water will further increase stress levels and intensify the adverse effects of climate change without doubt.

The vast regions of India are under tropical climate, which is conducive for agriculture throughout the year due to favorable warm and sunny conditions, but there is a need to provide a perennial source of water to meet the high rate of evapo-transpiration from agricultural land. Due to rapidly growing population (as well as other factors) in Northern Indo-Gangetic Plain, this area is considered to be at high risk for water shortages in the future. Eastern region of Uttar Pradesh also lies in the Indo-Gangetic plain, and together with western Bihar, is the most-densely-populated area in the world, known as "Poorvanchal Region".

Namami Gange is an Integrated Conservation Mission by Government of India for effective abatement of pollution, conservation and rejuvenation of National River Ganga. But National Family Health Survey, District Level Health Survey, Uttar Pradesh HDR Report, Census and NSSO has assessed the drinking water and sanitation in Uttar Pradesh and declared that the provision of piped water supply still remains an unachieved goal in this region. Water supply system in urban areas of poorvanchal region is too old and needs to be updated.

The Poorvanchal region is an important geographic sub-region of Uttar Pradesh which comprises the eastern end of Uttar Pradesh and parts of western Bihar. This region is located in Eastern Uttar Pradesh is situated in the east and south east part of the state, incorporating Gorakhpur, Basti, Azamgarh, Mirzapur, Ayodhya (except Barabanki), Varanasi, Prayagraj (except Fatehpur) and Devipatan divisions of Uttar Pradesh. Above 45 percent population of this region is engaged in agricultural activity, which required water in sufficient amount. But still due to lack of proper water irrigation system a large area is dependent on natural source of water. Due to reduction in rainfall intensity in last few decades water level is declining.

Topics Covered

- Irrigation and Water Resources
- Namami Gange and Rural Water Supply
- Minor Irrigation
- Rural Development
- Urban Development
